Description of Property and Justification: (Please attach map and photo)

The Annapolis USARC is comprised of building originally constructed as a component in the Baltimore-Washington NIKE defensive system. A one story frame structure, built in 1955, was formerly the command center, and is presently the office for the USARC. Adjacent to it is a one-story frame structure built in 1955 which was originally a mess hall, and is presently used as a classroom. To the east is a one story structure used for storage, also built in 1955. The launch bays for the NIKE complex have been sealed in asphalt and surrounded by a chain link fence. The site also contains walkways, lighting, and a bus stop all dating to the NIKE era of the site's function.

The Army Reserve Centers do not appear to meet the Criteria for Evaluation for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. The Reserve Centers do not meet Criteria A or B, as research has not revealed an association with a significant event or individual. The Reserve Centers do not meet Criterion C, as they do not embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, represent the work of a master, or possess high artistic values. The former use of this property as a NIKE missile site was considered, and the property does not appear to meet the criteria for Evaluation for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. The property had been significantly altered, and no longer retains the integrity to qualify this property for National Register status. The missile launch area has been demolished and covered with a fenced asphalt pad. The original office, mess and storage structures have been structurally altered to support office uses. Furthermore, the resource does not meet Criterion B, as research has not revealed an association with a significant individual. The resource does not meet Criterion C, as it does not embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, represent the work of a master, or possess high artistic values.

Finally, no information has been found that would qualify the resource under Criterion D for its potential to yield information important in prehistory or history. The Reserve Centers are not eligible for inclusion in the National Register.
